“This is a gift to women and midwives. It is an invaluable contribution to our understanding of women and birth and the role midwifery plays in facilitating women’s birth processes and improving outcomes for both mother and baby. It is a distillation of knowledge gathered from women and their families, midwifery experience and research. It is a wonderful example of the balance of art and science which comprises midwifery’s unique body of knowledge.”

Karen Guilliland - National Director, New Zealand College of Midwives
Bronwen Pelvin - Midwifery Adviser, New Zealand College of Midwives

“This is another welcome book to add to the home birth debate. Written in a clear and readable style it carries with it much passion and warmth from an author who has been through, and challenged, her experiences of hospital and home birth midwife, and mother.

...The final chapters are a must for students and midwives considering working in the home setting as they illustrate the skills and attitudes required.

There is much in this text that has been written by campaigning midwives in the past. What is most sad is that it is still having to be written after so many years of trying to change practise. To be recommended to all in practise here and elsewhere.”

Jennifer Hall, Clinical Editor, The Practising Midwife, December 2001.
